effective upon the fall of Japan in August 1945, it is necessary first to examine the so-called redeploy-ment period be-tween the collapse of Germany and the surrender of Japan to appreciate fully the train-ing problem of Army Ground Forces today.

The task confronting the War Department in

May 1945 of transferring a substantial portion of our forces from the European and Mediterranean Theaters to the Pacific could be solved only by the highest degree of planning, and by placing a tremendous of planning, and by placing a tremendous burden upon our entire shipping system, both rail and water. The time schedule, of necessity, was tight; the utmost co-ordination was required in all staff echelons if such an ambitious logistical operation were to be successful. It would have involved large scale troop move-ments unprecedented in timing and scope had we been able to move our highly ments unprecedented in timing and scope had we been able to move our highly trained combat experienced units, intact, either by way of the United States, or directly to staging areas in the Pacific Theater. However, this could not be done. The element of soldier morale, after long European campaigns, weighed heavily. Even in the urgency of war it simply was not fessible to send men or units that Even in the urgency of war it simply was not feasible to send men or units that had borne the brunt of the fight with Germany to the large scale and presumably costly landing operations being set up for the knockout blow to Japan, even though the veterans were immeasurably better trained and more experienced than recently arrived individuals and units from the United States. the United States.
With the initial phase of redeployment, the Point System began to adjust and level off personnel in units of the European and Mediterranean Theaters in accordand Mediterranean Theaters in accordance with well known considerations of length of service, decorations, family responsibilities, etc. This system undoubtedly accomplished the most equitable and detailed classification of individuals who should or should not be subjected to further overseas service that was possible for a group the size of our army. However, in looking backward, it appears that the plan was idealistic, and leaned too far toward the aim of maximum benefit and fairness to the individual rather too far toward the aim of maximum benefit and fairness to the individual rather than toward the subordination of individual good to the maintenance of an effective army.

Even in the early stages of its implementation, the point system began to demonstrate (Please turn to Page 807)

Army Week Celebration Stresses Cooperation With Industry in National Security Program

With the theme "A Strong America is a Peaceful America" the Nation will celebrate Army Day on 7 April and Army veek from 6 April to 12 April. In its programs the War Department is stressing "the outstanding achievement of American industry—from the largest corporation to the smallest subcontractor—in supplying the sinews of war that enabled the Army to smash through to victory, and the necessity of continuing the partnership in peacetime to keep America strong and secure." Because of the vital importance of Industrial Preparedness to all components of the Defense team, the Army and Navy Journal is pleased to present the following articles on the subject prepared, at its request, by the Under Secretary of War and the Assistant Secretary of the Navy:

By HON. KENNETH C. ROYALL

By HON, KENNETH C. ROYALL Under Secretary of War

A<sup>N</sup> America strong and healthy in its economic life is the soundest foundation upon which to build true military preparedness. This is the basic underlying principle upon which all planning for industrial mobilization must rest.

It is no detraction from the heroic tion from the heroic deeds and sacrifices of our fighting men to state that Ameri-can industrial pow-er was the greatest single factor in the victories of World War II. Without this overwhelming material force, the s material force, the sacrifices of our men would have been immeasurably greater and the conflict would have been inevi-

Elimination of Army Officers

Secretary of War Patterson this week submitted a letter to Congress in explana-tion of the elimination features of the retirement bill War Department representatives put before Congress two weeks ago, as reported in the ARMY AND NAVY JOURNAL of 22 March.

These elimination provisions are prosed in addition to the forced retirement

These elimination provisions are proposed in addition to the forced retirement features of the promotion bill.

In his letter, Secretary Patterson said:
"The War Department believes that the proposed bill would establish a more equitable procedure for the removal of inefficient officers. Permanent provisions of existing law are contained in section 24b of the National Defense Act, as amended. Because of the cumbersome procedure prescribed therein, its provisions were suspended for the duration of the present emergency, and they were replaced by the Joint Resolution of 29 July 1941. Experience during the war indicated that the Joint Resolution of 29 July 1941 provides a more expeditious means of removal, but may not adequately safeguard the interests of the individual affected.
"Section 2 would require a selection board convened by the Secretary of War to review annually the records of all officers on the active list of the Regular Army, referred to such board by major commands designated by the War Department, to determine under standards prescribed by the Secretary, which officers should be required to show cause for retention on the active list. THE Navy's plan for obtaining its material requirements may best be described as a decentralization of opera-ralization of opera-tions to the Bureaus of the Navy Depart-ment with broad powers of coordina-tion of what is needed being vested in the Office of the Chief of Naval Op-erations and conally erations and equally broad powers of how we shall obtain how we shall obtain it being vested in the Assistant Secretary of the Navy. This is the fourth stage of an organizational growth which started in the War of the Revolution, when all of the Navy's limited logistic needs were met by the War Department. The second stage lasted from 1798 to 1842, during which time nearly all the business of the Navy Department was handled in long-hand in the Office of the Secretary. The third stage lasted for 100 years, under the Bureaus which were created just before the Mexican War to (Please turn to Back Page)

Unification of the Services

The problem of the future of the Marine Corps this week featured the studies on the proposed unification of the Armed Services before the Senate Committee on Armed Services and the House Committee on Expenditures on Executive Departments Departments.

Departments.

The hearings before the Senate committee were confined to securing statements and the questioning of Vice Adm. Forrest Sherman, USN, and Maj. Gen. Lauris Norstad, USA, who had been delegated by the Secretaries of the Navy and War, respectively, to formulate the bill under consideration, and who did so with the consultative assistance of Mr. Charles S. Murphy, White House Administrative assistant, and Mr. Clark Clifford an adviser of President Truman. According to Admiral Sherman, Mr. Murphy was present at every step of the formulation of the bill, but only for concultation on legal aspects and not on military aspects of it.

Navy Promotion Plans Under Study in House

The House subcommittee on personnel in the Armed Services opened hearings this week on the Navy promotion bill, HR 2537, with assurances that it will study Army and Navy promotion proposals thoroughly.

The group heard the Chief of Naval Personnel, Rear Adm. Thomas L. Sprague, USN, trace the studies over the past two years leading to formulation of the Navy bill in its present form, and then heard Comdr. D. L. Martineau, USN, explain in detail how the bill would operate. operate.

Representative Dewey Short (R-Mo.), chairman of the personnel subcommittee, repeated a previous announcement that a decision on the Navy bill would be de-layed until the subcommittee has heard layed until the subcommittee has heard the Army explain its promotion bill, HR 2536. Brig. Gen. John E. Dahlquist, USA, president of the War Department Plan-ning Board, attended the Navy hearings with members of his staff.

Hearings were held 1, 2, and 3 April, but have been recessed at least until 14

April.

April.

Chairman Short expressed amazement that he has received no more than a handful of criticisms of the Navy plan. He has urged all who care to testify on either the Army or Navy bill to register with the clerk of the Armed Services committee. When the Army bill comes up, he said, he wants to hear from members of the Organized Reserve, the National Guard, retired officers, and enlisted men, in addition to Regular officers.

Guard, retired officers, and enlisted men, in addition to Regular officers.

Admiral Sprague told the committee that the Navy's promotion plans had been made known throughout the Fleet and Shore Establishment, and that "no one attacked the general features of the bill. They criticized only in detail, and then only in the smallest detail."

Representative W. Sterling Cole (R-N.Y.) asserted, however, that he has received many criticisms of the Army promotion bill, and asked the Navy Department to look back into history and report the reaction throughout the Navy when the sea services adopted the principle of selection in 1916.

The Navy's report to the subcommittee, which is to be inserted in the record of the hearings, contained articles quoted from issues of the ABMY AND NAVX JOUBNAL of 1915 and 1916. ## Lt. Cols. Nominated

President Truman 31 March sent to the Senate the long delayed nominations of 682 lieutenant colonels to be colonels in the Regular Army.

When received at the White House the list contained the names of 683, but President Truman removed the name of Lt. Col. A. Kilian before forwarding the list to the Senate.

Secretary of War Patterson, following submission of the list to the White House,

Secretary of War Patterson, following submission of the list to the White House, issued the following statement:

"A list of 683 lieutenant colonels eligible for promotion to colonel in the Regular Army was sent to the President by the War Department. This list was submitted on the basis of seniority, as required by law. The name of Lt. Col. James A. Killan was included in that list, because, under the law, his name could not be omitted.

"Although a system of promotion by seniority has some value, I have felt that it should be replaced by promotion by selection for merit wherever possible. Promotions above the rank of colonel are already by selection. In a bill recently introduced, H.R. 2528, I have proposed to the Congress that it extend promotion by selection in all ranks above that of first lieutenant.

"The enactment of such a law would relieve the Secretary of War of the legal compulsion of forwarding names on an automatic basis of seniority, and give him the responsibility of selecting officers for promotion on the basis of their performance, I hope that Congress will give the Secretary of War that authority. Since that proposed bill is not the law today, I had no alternative under the present law but to send this list to the President."

At the time the nominations were made

At the time the nominations were made there remained an additional 35 vacancles in the grade of colonel. The presence on the list of nominations of several offi-cers who have been retired subsequent to preparation of the list does not act to create additional vacancies, the War De-partment said, as the total of 717 vacanpartment said, as the total of 11 vacan-cles included these retirements.

More than 300 of those on the list had been nominated last February for promo-tion to colonel, confirmation voted by the Senate, and later reconsidered because of the presence of Colonel Kilian's name. The nominations then died with the adjourn-ment of the 79th Congress, Colonel Kilian, under court martial charges at the time this first list was submitted was subsequently sentenced to pay a $500 fine and received a reprimand. As his sentence did not involve his position of the Regular Army promotion list he remained on that list and his name of necessity was submitted to the White House by the War Department. partment. With the confirmation of the promotion of all those above Colonel Kilian on the promotion list he will become the senior officer on the list of lieutenant colonels. officer on the list of lieutenant colonels. Should he, with chances of promotion apparently remote, decide to retire, he has over 30 years' service. But should he elect to remain on active duty, and should the Army's new promotion bill providing for promotion by selection fail of passage, the situation will again arise where the War Department must submit his name for promotion. name for promotion.

The Department states that the deletion of Colonel Kilian's name from the list will of Colonel Kilian's name from the list will have no effect upon the status of those junior to him after they are promoted other than advancing them one file to fill up the vacancy.

Unification of Services

three departments instead of a single department or the two now existing, Admiral' Sherman, arguing for a separate Navy entity said:

"The Navy with its Naval Aviation, its Marine Corps and its own service forces and logistic support is a functionally well balaned service. Its flexibility, range and striking power on and over the sea and over coastal regions, as well as its adaptability to joint employment during the last war, speak for themselves. The basic principles upon which these attributes rest have not been changed by developments in the art of war. This functional balance in our naval forces should be preserved until actual developments necessitate changes. Similarly the Army and the Air Force should be developed as balanced autonomous forces with such of their own service elements as cannot be more effectively supplied by another service.

"The naval service has been consistent in toomy of the Navy Department and the Navy, including its Marine Corps and navalaviation as developed through experience in peace and war and also such service and logistic elements as are essential to naval combat efficiency. The naval service has been consistent in its desire to ensure also that the billity of the Navy to discharge its responsibility for the security of the Nation is not impaired, and to retain those imponderables of spirit and morale so essential to a military service. At the same time it recognizes the reliable of the Navy to discharge its responsibility for the desire of the Army and the Air Force also to have a co-equal autonomous status with such service elements as are essential to their combat efficiency.

"I must be frank in stating that naval thinking with respect to any form of unification providing for the establishment of a separate Air Force has been marked by some apprehension. Such apprehension has been influenced by the effect on the British Navy of the establishment of the Royal Air Force, the effect on the Japanese Navy of domination by

In concluding his prepared statement, Admiral Sherman advocated passage of the bill, S. 758, in its entirety for the following reasons:

"(a) It will provide a comprehensive or all program for the future security of United States;

l'nited States;
"(b) It will provide for the integration of the fore'gn and military policies of the gov-

"(c) It will coordinate under civilian con-trol the departments, agencies, and functions of the government relating to national se-of the departments, agentify to national security;

"(d) It will provide permanent machinery for the formation of integrated programs for the most effective use of the nation's military, human, natural, and industrial resources in the interest of national security;

"(e) It will provide for coordination of the nation's foreign intelligence activities and for the central operations of foreign intelligence functions;

"(f) It will prevent undesirable duplication, harmful competition, and unnecessary overlapping of functions;

"(g) It will provide for adequate provision for and coordination of research and development on scientific matters relating to the national security;

"(h) Act Smally it will provide for an ef-tional security;

"(h) And finally it will provide for an effective team of land, naval, and air forces for the defense of the nation."

Questions propounded to Admiral Sherman elicited replies as follows:
Senator Tydings (D-Md.)—Will it be possible to have an automatic set-up to provide for the unified commander in the absence of a definite order from some higher-up authority?

ity?

Admiral Sherman—It is my hope that within the next few months the Joint Chiefs of Staff will issue an order to provide for automatic command until someone is designated for it. The present legislation puts the responsibility on the Joint Chiefs of Staff for a plan to cover emergencies.

Senator Bridges (R-N.H.)—Is this bill the one you agreed on?

Admiral Sherman—It is the result of collaboration with representatives of the President. This bill is not the same draft we agreed on originally but the substance of it is the same.

same.

Senator Bridges—Who drafted this bill—what influences brought pressure to change your bill? Information that I have indicates that this is not the bill agreed on. If it is not, I think hearings should be started to find out who scuttled your bill.

Admiral Sherman—This is the final draft concurred in by the Army and Navy and the representatives of the President.

Senator Bridges—Have you the original bill drafted by you?

Chart of the proposed organization for a Department of National Defense as presented this week to the House Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments by Secretary of War Patterson.

Admiral Sherman—I have a file of all 8 drafts, and this is the final one.

Senator Tydings—Is this bill the substance of your original agreement or has a new philosophy been introduced since the original draft was set up?

Admiral Sherman—It contains the substance of our original agreement.

In continuing the hearing on 3 April, the committee had as a witness Maj. Gen. Lauris Norstad, AC, USA, Director of Plans and Operations Division, War Department General Staff, and Vice Adm. Forrest Sherman, USN, a witness on two previous days.

when asked by Senator Robertson (R-Wyo.) whether his prepared statement had been referred to the Secretary of the Navy, Admiral Sherman said it had been, and to the Bureau of the Budget and to the President.

When General Norstad took the witness stand, Senator Robertson asked him whether the Secretary of War had ap-proved it. The General stated "I do not know." Asked by the same Senator proved it. The General stated "I do not know." Asked by the same Senator whether the President had had a copy, the General replied "I understand he has." When asked whether there had been any changes made in it, General Norstad said there had been no changes or corrections in it.

In his formal statement, General Nor-

In his formal statement, General Norstad stated:
"Prior to World War II, the real necessity for the integration of our armed forces was not so readily apparent. I am convinced, however, that one lesson which has come most clearly from the costly experience of this war is that there must be unified direction of land, sea and air forces at the top as well as in all parts of the world where our armed forces are serving."

General Norstad then devoted his or unincation. Explanatory of part of the legislation, General Norstad said:

"The Bill provides initially for the transfer to the United States Air Force of officers who now hold commissions in the statutory Air Corps and of enlisted men enlisted in the Air Corps or Army Air Forces. There are thousands of officers, enlisted men and civilian employees now assigned to the Air Forces and performing duties for the Air Forces who are not included in this initial transfer. For example, officers commissioned in the Corps of Engineers and assigned for duty with the Air Forces will continue to perform the same duties under the United States Air Force but will remain for the present as officers of the Corps of Engineers, United States Army. The extent to which this personnel may be later transferred from the Army to the Air Force is left to the discretion of the Secretary of National Defense, who may direct such transfers any time within two years from the date of enactment of this Act."

The same plan is to be followed with

The same plan is to be followed with respect to property, installations, and activities now under the jurisdiction of the Commanding General, AAF; likewise the functions, duties and powers of the Secretary of the Army and Department of the Army now under the same officer will be transferred to the Secretary of the Air Force and the Department of the Air Force. A two-way transfer of military and civilian personnel, property, records, installations, agencies, activities and projects may continue for two years between the Department of the Army and the Department of the Air Force, at the discretion of the Secretary of National Defence.

According to General Norstad, "these provisions will afford time in which proper adjustments may be made without duplicating functions where this can be availed."

The initial hearing on unification, be-fore the House Committee on Expendi-tures in the Executive Departments, was tures in the Executive Departments, was held on 2 April, and succeeding sessions will be held on 10 April or later.

At the first session, the committee ruled out the necessity of having Secretary of War Patterson read his prepared statement which was practically identical with his statement before the Senate Committee on Armed Services, each member of the committee having had and perused a copy of it, according to their claim. The committee confined itself to questioning the Secretary about procurement: duplithe Secretary about procurement; dupli-cation of services; the possibility of economy resulting from unification; ineconomy resulting from unincation; in-telligence; and the authority of the Sec-retary of National Defense, the Secre-taries of the Army, Navy, and Air, and of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

Lively interest in the place of the Ma-

Lively interest in the place of the Marine Corps in the new set-up resulted from the question by Representative Latham (R-N.Y.) "Would it be possible under the terms of this bill to relegate the Marine Corps to a relatively unimportant function or task in the National Defense?" To this Secretary Patterson replied: "I do not think so. Their status is undisturbed. It was the intent of no one to minimize the service to be expected of the Marine Corps."

The following questions and answers

The following questions and answers then ensued:

Rep. Latham—"Will you refer me to some language in the bill which would prevent that?"

that?"
Sec. Patterson—"The only language that deals specifically with the Marine Corps is the language in the Section 106 where it describes the Department of the Navy and says that it shall include the Headquarters, United States Marine Corps, the entire operating forces of the United States Marine Corps, including the reserve components of such forces."

forces of the United States Marine Corps, including the reserve components of such forces."

Rep. Latham—"There is nothing in that language which would prevent the Secretary of National Defense from changing the functions of the Marine Corps or reducing them to merely a police force at a military establishment or establishments, is there?"

Sec. Patterson—"There is nothing there that defines the functions or would prevent him from trying to reduce them or trying to expand them, That is strictly under the control of Congress every year when they come up with the budget."

Rep. Latham—"Under this bill, is it not under the direction of the Secretary of National Defense who makes up the budget requests? He could cut the Marine Corps in Half, could he not?"

Sec. Patterson—"If the President approved, and unless Congress intervened, which they of course could do. They have control of it."

Rep. Latham—"You and I agree that it would be possible under the terms of this bill to make the Marine Corps something other than the fighting unit that it is today?"

Sec. Patterson—"That all will depend on future developments of warfare."

Rep. Harness (R-Ind.) "The 79th Congress fixed the size of the Marine Corps, the Army, and the Navy and this bill would not in any way change that. The only way it could be changed would be by the Appropriation Committee refusing to give the money to maintain the forces that are already established by law."

Rep. Latham—"Is there any feeling on the part of the War Department that they would tend to or would like to limit or curtail the functions of the Marine Corps as they now exist?"

exist?"

Sec. Patterson—"No, and we have agreed with the Navy on the terms of an Executive Order, which can always be changed and does not freeze you, defining their functions. The fears and suspicions so fare as the Marine Corps is concerned, in my opinion, have no reasonable ground."

Rep. Latham—"Is it not a fact that the Joint Chiefs of Staff have officially taken up this question of limiting the functions of the Marine Corps?"

Sec. Patterson—"There has been no deci-

Rep. Latham—"Is it not a fact that the Joint Chiefs of Staff have officially taken up this question of limiting the functions of the Marine Corps?"

Sec. Patterson—"There has been no decision of that kind."

Rep. Hoffman—"The question was, is it not a fact that they have taken up the question."

Sec. Patterson—"There has been no doubt of that, but the terms of the Executive Order that have been agreed upon, on all hands, takes care of that."

Rep. Latham—"I would like to read you from the hearings before the Senate on S. 2044, where General Vandegrift said 'For some time I have been aware that the very existence of the Marine Corps stood as a continuing affront to the War Department General Staff, but had hoped that this attitude would end with the recent war, as a result of its dramatic demonstration of the complementary and unconflicting roles of land power, naval power, and air power. But, following a careful study of the circumstances as they have developed in the past six months, I am convinced that my hopes were groundless, that the War Department's intentions regarding the Marine Corps are quite unchanged, and that even in advance of this proposed legislation it is seeking to reduce the sphere of the Marine Corps to ceremonial functions and to the provision of small ineffective combat formations and labor troops for service on landing beaches!"

"Then the Chairman (of the Senate committee) said: 'General, perhaps this is not the time to ask you the question, but are there documents or papers that have been drawn up by the Joint Chiefs of Staff which confirm your fears about the Marine Corps being rendered ineffective?'"

"General Vandegrift said 'Yes, sir. These papers expressed over the signature of the Chief of Staff of the Army Air Forces the War Department's intentions in respect to the Marine Corps in clear and unmistakable langunge. It is a series of papers, and 1478 series of papers."

Maladministration of the Army Dental Corps at the hands of high-ranking officers is charged in an editorial appearing in the current issue of the Journal of the American Dental Association. The proceedings in each case would then be forwarded to a board of review convened under section 4, which would accord a hearing to the officer concerned and would transmit its recommendations to the Secretary of War for final action. However, if either the board of inquiry or the board of review should recommend the retention of an officer, all proceedings in his case would be terminated, subject only to the possibility of his selection in a succeeding year to be ordered to show cause for retention. If any of these officers should retire or die prior to promotion, it would necessitate renominating the remaining officers in order to change their dates of rank to correspond with the vacancies.

ON ARMY DAY, APRIL 7TH, ASK YOURSELF,

"What am I doing to help insure the peace?"

No nation on earth wants enduring peace more than the United States. No nation is working harder toward that goal. But until permanent peace is assured, the War Department warns that certain minimum requirements for trained manpower must be met to guard the safety of the United States and carry out its commitments in occupied countries.

A Strong America

a Peaceful America

This pattern of protection gives every qualified young man an opportunity to take a personal, active interest in keeping his country strong enough to defend itself and make its will for peace known throughout the world.

First, and most important, the strength of the Regular Army must be maintained through a steady stream of voluntary enlistments. Here is a good full-time job at good pay, with many attractive advantages hard to equal in any other worthwhile career.

Back of the Regular Army must stand a welltrained, well-equipped National Guard, which you can join now and attend a meeting one night a week and take part in the annual two-week field-training period at Army pay rates.

Any former officer or enlisted man can do his part by joining the Organized Reserve Corps and broadening his military education through special courses and active duty training. If you qualify, your Army grade or rank is yours in the Reserves.

Men in college can do their part by joining the R.O.T.C. and get their training and Reserve commission along with their education.

This is your country. It will remain a sufe country only so long as it stays a strong country. When tomorrow's history is written, will you be able to say, "I did my part for the peace"?

Listen to "Sound Off," "Warriors of Peace," "Valce of the Army," "Proudly We Hail" on your radio.

Personal motivation of this type creates a cut-throat psychology in which it is impossible to get proper coordinated cooperation. Lt. Condr.: "I favor the peace time promotion bill for the Navy, now being submitted to Congress, as it stands. My reasons are that the study made at this Headquarters by various officers indicates that the bill provides for the proper promotion and retirement of all categories of officers—regular navy, naval reserve and temporary officers with a reasonable tenure of service in the Navy. The undersigned has given junior temporary officers in this area an opportunity to study the bill as it is printed in the Army and Navy Journal as well as from publicity received from other sources and they are of the opinion from other sources and they are of the opinion that the bill gives due recognition to their former enlisted service and their service as commissioned officers through the emergency on the retired list, and who were commissioned in the regular Navy pursuant to the provisions of the Act approved 18 April 1946 (Public Law 347—79th Congress) shall receive retired pay of not less than 50 percentum of active duty pay at time of retirement. This provision excludes and does not take into consideration the hundreds of Supply Corps and other Staff corps officers who were transferred from the Naval Reserve to the Regular Navy under provisions of prior law, and who accepted their commissions early in the war prior to the enactment of Public Law 347. It constitutes a 'windfail' and places a premium on those officers who could not make up their minds as to whether or not they wanted to remain in the Navy.

"My contemporaries, who came on active wanted to remain in the Navy.

"My contemporaries, who came on active duty at the same time as I, and who were classmates at Supply Corps school with me, and who either were not selected for a regular Navy commission, or who falled to apply in 1942, 1943, 1944, or 1945 when applications were invited, would be guaranteed 50% retired pay simply because they were appointed under Public Law 347. This '50% guarantee' was not held up to them as an inducement to apply for a commission, but is a 'windfall,' and I feel that it should either be deleted from the bill, or made applicable to all former Naval bill, or made applicable to all former Naval Bill, or made applicable to all former Navail Reserve officers, who have accepted appoint-ments in the regular Navy, irrespective of whether or not they accepted their appoint-ments subsequent to the enactment of the Act of 18 April 1946."

Naval Reserves Meet

Secretary Forrestal told the first annual convention of RONS last week that nual convention of RONS last week that if Navy appropriations for fiscal 1948 should be cut below Budget Bureau figures, "our program and our naval strength would be seriously endangered."

The Navy Secretary headed a list of speakers in St. Louis for the gathering of the Reserve Officers of the Naval Services. Other speakers were Fleet Admiral Wil-liam F. Halsey, jr., USN, Vice Adm. Wil-liam M. Fechteler, USN, and Rear Adm. Paul Lee, USN.

Secretary Forrestal declared: Secretary Forrestal declared:
"The first naval estimates that we collected from the various Bureaus of the Navy totaled 8 billion, 800 million. The naval estimates that we sent to the Bureau of the Budget were scaled down to 5 billion, 600 million. That figure was cut by the Budget Bureau to 3 bil-lion, 654 million. If it should be reduced be-low that minimum estimate our program and our naval strength would be seriously en-dangered.

our naval strength would be seriously endangered.

"Our ships will have to perform their global missions with crews substantially smaller than is essential for efficient operation. The education of Reserves entering the Regular line of the Navy, for which Congress and the Navy both made definite commitments, will have to be curtailed. We will have to cut deeply into the research program, with all that means in keeping the Navy up to date.

"Next, we shall have to cut down on Fleet training, and this is probably the most serious training, and this is probably the most serious training, and this is probably the most serious impairment of all,

"And, finally, the entire Naval Reserve program will come in for sharp readjustment downward, including acute curtailment of the Naval Reserve flying program."

Mr. Forrestal said he had "labored within the Navy to have the Regulars regard the Reserves as a part of the Navy itself just as much in peace time as in war

"Conversely." he asserted. "I now ask you so to conduct yourselves that the pro job of keeping our sea power vigorous in time of peace, may be confident that it has the active support of the Naval Re-serve."

Secretary Forrestal praised President Truman's requested aid to Greece and Turkey as "a great contribution to the hopes of future peace." He said the Navy plans to send "three or four officers and a very few men" to Greece to survey the situation, and if more personnel are indicated they would not number more than 25 officers and a hundred men."

Submarine Anniversary

At the direction of Secretary Forrestal, Navy fleet and submarine commands will observe Submarine Day on Friday, 11
April, commemorating the forty-seventh anniversary of the acceptance of the first submarine by the U. S. Navy.
The original underseas craft, which was designed a "submarsible tornede boat" designated a "submersible torpedo boat," was the USS Holland, named for John was the USS Holland, named for John Philip Holland, American inventor and head of the J. B. Holland Torpedo Boat head of the J. B. Holland Torpedo Boat Company, predecessor of the Electric Boat Company of Groton, Conn.

The Holland was accepted 11 April 1900, and was placed in commission on 12 Oct. 1900. She measured only 53 feet in length, had a displacement of only 74 tons, and had only one tube from which to fire her three torpedoes.

In designating the submarine anniver sary, Secretary Forrestal said:

sary, Secretary Forrestal said:

"The exemplary record achieved by the officers and men of the Navy's submarines makes it proper for the activities concerned to observe this day, April 11, 1947. All commands concerned are encouraged to observe this anniversary appropriately and with adequate publicity so that the people of the United States may become more aware of the magnificent contributions to victory made by the submarine component of our Navy team."

As part of the agniversary colebration.

As part of the anniversary celebration. the first television transmission in history to originate aboard a submerged submarine will take place on the evening of 10 April aboard the USS Trumpetfish in the New York Naval Shipyard. Television cameras, set up inside the submarine as well as on the dockside, will transmit the scene of her descent.

SATURDAY, APRIL 5, 1947

"There is no means by which we can better honor our heroic dead than by our support of their living comrades who carry on the mission they so nobly advanced. -PRESIDENT TRUMAN'S ABMY DAY PROCLAMATION.

OUR PRIORITY LIST

OUR PRIORITY LIST

1. Establishment and protection of peace through maintenance in accordance with our National needs and ternational commitments, of Regular Establishments organized, equipped and trained to utilize and employ aders materials of war, and coordinated with Industry and Labor kept intimately familiar with the manufacture of supply of such materials.

3. Belantific research to keep our lead in the atom bomb, guided missiles, and biological and radio active ents, and development of methods for their use and for defense against them, plue effective safeguards in accreey.

7. Each and retrement benefits for former Army enlisted personnel and Warrant Officers who served in war assess basis now accorded these of the other Armed Forces.

8. Upward revision of pension scales to insure Service widows and dependents a living insuma.

B Y proclamation of President Truman next week, 6 to 12 April, has been set aside B as Army Week and 7 April as Army Day—a time during which he urges the American people to be "mindful of the Army's needs." Throughout the land military posts will hold open house and be hosts to civilian neighbors and admirers, there will be parades and reviews in the larger cities, patriotic organizations will hold dinners and meetings at which tribute will be paid to the Nation's military forces. While a proud citizenry thus honors its defenders, the War Department is significantly emphasizing the key position Industry holds in the National Security program and thus is exemplifying that spirit of team work and cooperation between the Armed Forces and the Forces of Production so vital to the maintenance of our strength and hence to our ability to keep the peace. Carrying out this theme, the Army and Navy Journal is proud to present in this issue informative articles by the Honorable Kenneth C. Royal, Under Secretary of War, and the Honorable W. John Kenney, Assistant Secretary of the Navy, who are charged with the task of integrating our defense requirements with our industrial capacity and who, as members of the Army and Navy Muni-tions Board, are working with Industry and Labor to build up that close understanding of each other's needs and capacities so essential to fullest utilization of our resources in both manpower and production. It is important that the American people and their representatives in Congress realize that great as were the sacrifices made by our Armed Forces and those of our Allies in achieving victory even greater suffering and sacrifices would have been exacted had it not been for the efficiency with which the Arsenal of Democracy was built and operated by American Industry. In this age of guided missiles and atomic warfare the Industrial factor in National power looms even larger. "Just as victory could not have been won without Industry's contribution," General of the Army Dwight D. Elsenhower said recently, "peaceful security cannot be maintained without Industry's active cooperation as a member of the National team." Thus to properly support the Army which the Nation honors today, as well as all components of the National Defense team, the willingness of Industry to take its place in the Defense structure must be fully implemented with the necessary organization and appropriations.

WAR and Navy Department officials as well as the members of the Senate and House Committees on Armed Services are studying the comments and suggestions received by the Army and Navy Journal in its survey of opinion of officers from the field and fleets on the proposed permanent promotion bills. Beneficial results already are flowing from studies thus made. In the Navy Bill, for example, one officer of the Supply Corps in writing to the Army and Navy Journal discussed those sections of the Navy bill providing that officers above the grade of lieutenant who twice fail of selection will be retired with retired pay computed at the rate of  $2\frac{1}{2}$  per cent of their active duty pay at the time of retirement. Other sections provide that lieutenant commanders who twice fail of selection would be continued on the active list until they have completed 20 years' active duty, at which time they would be retired. They would thus be retired with half-pay. Some transferees, not having entered in the grade of ensign would not complete 20 years' total commissioned service simultaneously with their contemporaries who are Naval Academy graduates. Accordingly, the measure contains saving clauses giving transferees the equivalent of Army constructive service in order that they will also receive at least 50 per cent pay when retired. The officer in his comments recalls that he and other Supply Corps officers (as well as some Naval aviators) were commissioned prior to the enactment of Public Law 347, under which the transfer program was carried out, and thus apparently would not be protected by the saving clause as originally drafted. When this comment was called to the attention of responsible officials in the Bureau of Personnel they readily saw the injustice of the situation and promptly prepared a redraft of the saving clauses to protect these groups and are planning to recommend the changes to the Congressional Committees when that section of the bill is reached. The first group of these comments from officers already has been recopied with all names and identifications omitted and given to members of the Armed Services Committees who report that they have studied them with interest and profit and find them very valuable in their sideration of the bills. In order that the Committees and the Departments may have as broad a cross section as possible we urge all officers to send in their comments

Fast T-2 tankers, recently discharged from service, have joined the postwar fleet of Tide Water Associated Oil Company. Each tanker has a carrying capacity of five and one half million gallons — some 80,000,000 miles of power for America's cars.

A Navy K-type airship, manned by ex-Navy L.T.A. personnel, now carries the world's biggest animated, illuminated sign—advertising Tydol Flying-A-Gasoline, new, Improved Veedol Motor Oil, and Federal Tires—on regularly scheduled flights under the Tide Water Associated Oil Company banner.

During the war years Tide Water concentrated all its vast resources to the production of badly needed, battle-quality fuels and lubricants.

We were eager - and proud - to contribute to the national effort.

Now that the smoke has cleared away, we shall exercise all our war-learned experience in the production of still better products — for the betterment of the American people.

We are eager — and proud — to be able to do so.

Maj. Gen. Luther D. Miller, USA, Chief of Chaplains, has composed a special Army Week prayer which will be used by chaplains at all Army installations in the United States and overseas in services Easter Sunday, during Army Week, and Sunday, 13 April.

and overseas in services Easter Sunday, during Army Week, and Sunday, 13 April.

The text of the prayer follows:
"Almighty God our heavenly Father, Who art a Shield and Buckler to all those that put their trust in Thee, bless us Thy servants and the Army in which we serve; lead us and guide us by Thy good Spirit, strengthen and defend us by Thy might, that we may be to our land a sure defense against every enemy; support us in the day of battle, and in the time of peace keep us safe from all evil; endow us with courage and loyalty, and grant that in all things we may serve Thee without reproach. Let the light of Thy countenance, O God, shine upon our comrades departed, that they, increasing in knowledge and love of Thee, may go on from strength to strength, in the life of perfect service, in Thy heavenly kingdom. Grant to us who, at this Eastertide, are still in our pilgrimage and who walk as yet by faith, tha thaving served Thee with constancy here on earth, we may at length fall asleep peacefully in Thee and awake in Thy presence.

SUBMARINE LEADERSHIP

In 1900 the U. S. Navy's first submarine, the Holland, was completed by the Electric Boat Company. Since that historic event, EBCo, in cooperation with the U. S. Navy, has consistently led in the invention and development of safer, more comfortable, more efficient submarines. The number of EBCo-built subs of each class, with their silhouettes, is shown here. Today Electric Boat is continuing research and experimentation, so that America can always have the most advanced undersea craft in the world.

SERVICE NEWS AND GOSSIP

Foreign Affairs-American trusteeship of the Pacific islands once included in the Japanese Mandate was given unanimous approval in the United Nations Security Council this week, but only after Warren R. Austin had threatened to withdraw the trusteeship proposal rather than have it crippled by two amendments. The first, offered by Great Britain and supported by the Soviet and Polish delegates, would have extended equal commercial rights to all nations. It was opposed by Mr. Austin on the ground that whereas commercially the islands are assured a deficit there are security requirements, the vital American concern, which might be involved in alien "commercial" enterprises. The second amendment, offered by Russia, sought to grant to the United Nations the sole right to amend or alter the agreement: Mr. Austin insisted that consent of the United States must also be obtained, which is precisely what Article 15 provides. In the end, Mr. Gromyko supported the unamended agreement. It is worth noting that Mr. Austin specifically abstained from exercise of the veto itself; however, his warning that he would have to "withdraw the proposal" rather than permit its amendment in these two respects was close to a veto in effectiveness and, one might say, in purpose. The vote of the Council does not alter the status quo of the Marshalls, Carolines and Marianas, but rather gives a UN blessing to American administration of that strategically important area and places formally in American hands the desired authority to employ such security measures as appear necessary.

Thus far there is no official statement on the number of American troops to be maintained in Japan and Korea after 1 July (reductions in the European Area were referred to last week in this column). The American forces in the Philippines are due for reduction as rapidly as the non-permanent installations in the islands can be disposed of in accordance with the recently drafted treaty, but this is not an immediate affair nor is the number large. Our forces in China, already greatly reduced from the 1946 total, will be down to 6,180 by 1 June. Of these 1,600 infantrymen and 499 air personnel (all being Marines engaged in guarding and security work) are the sole combat type personnel. Total Marine personnel in China will be 3,499 on that date, with 1,510 Army and 1,171 Navy personnel from staff and services. The figures were formally announced by Secretary of State Marshall this week in a letter which answered the inquiry of the Soviet Foreign Minister. It contained a reminder that the American troops are there by request of China, and are the residue of the U. S. forces which assisted in repatriation of 3,000,000 Japanese from China. "As for the disposition of the estimated 700,000 Japanese taken in Manchuria by the Soviets, I have no information," the Secretary remarked pointedly.

General Lucius D. Clay, returning to his duties at Berlin after three weeks' service in Moscow as Secretary of State Marshall's adviser on German matters, offers a gloomy view of prospects for treaty agreement. The present conference he is satisfied will come to no agreement on reparations. It is a question whether it will do so on the level-of-industry issue which is closely tied to the reparations matter. Secretary Marshall's proposal is to leave within the Reich the industrial equipment which had been ticketed for removal but which, he says, can better be used in Germany in order to raise the level of German production: the nations which would have received that equipment would under his plan receive ultimately its equivalent in goods. At present the Soviet delegate exhibits no more interest in that plan than in the earlier American proposals: he has never yet yielded in his view that reparations must come immediately, despite the manifest inability of Germany to produce without first rebuilding industry to the productive point. The week's progress at the Conference has been small, indeed has been less than zero in that some of the minor matters upon which a special committee had come to agreement were found by the Big Four to be unsatisfactory and in need of revision. General Clay's predecessor as commander of U. S. Forces in Europe, General Joseph T. McNarney, has just left Germany to take on his new duties as head of the American delegation to the UN Military Staff.

The USS Carrier Leyte-set sail from Quonset Point on Thursday for what the Navy Department speaks of as routine maneuvers in the Eastern Mediterranean. After rendezvous with cruisers and destroyers she will proceed directly to Crete.

The bogey invoked by opponents of the President's Greek-Turkish relief measure that the United Nations was being bypassed instead of utilized—appears to have been laid by Senator Vandenberg's amendment. This amendment recognizes that Mr. Truman sought immediate relief which quite obviously the United Nations in its pres ent state cannot supply, and then invites United Nations intervention at any time. At any time when a majority in that body asks the United States to abandon the Greek-Turkish relief work, and the UN takes appropriate action to make American aid unnecessary Senator Vandenberg's revised amendment proposed, the relationship will end. The feeling is that the amendment strengthens the Truman plan, and should in fact have been in the original proposal as visible evidence of the United States' preference in world security enterprises for full use of United Nations powers whenever they exist. On the other hand, Senator Byrd's demand for an immediate show-down in the United Nations on Russian rights of veto, and acceptance of Russian withdrawal from the world organization, if that be the result, aroused considerable surprise. It must be remembered that the United States was primarily responsible for including the veto-right in the Charter; the reason for that position was the quite reasonable assumption that without that safeguard of national sovereignty the Charter would not have met the approval of the Senate itself. The Greek issue itself does not appear to be affected by the sudden death of King George and the succes sion of his brother Paul. It has always been clear that George was not a heroic figure in Greek minds, and that it was the sovereignty rather than the individual that won the national plebiscite. Paul is untainted by the Metaxas dictatorship memory.

The British House of Commons has passed the conscription bill through its criti-cal second reading, and thus practically assured continuation of the draft for the double purpose of making up the present British army (in 18 months' service) and of adding to the trained reserve (for an additional five years). It aims at a continuing reserve of 700,000 young men after 1953. The bill caused an ominous cleavage in the Government party, with 70 Labor members abstaining from vote, but practically all Conservatives supporting the Government.

National Guard—All restrictions on the enlistment of married men for the National Guard have been removed, Maj. Gen. Butler B. Miltonberger, Chief of the National Guard Bureau, announced 31 March. National Guard regulations had prescribed that not more than 50 per cent of the enlisted strength of any unit below the first three grades could be married men.

We have removed this restriction," General Miltonberger said, "because we want to benefit from the experience of the veterans of World War II who might be excluded under the old regulations."

The first conference of Senior Air and Ground Instructors of the National Guard will be held 10 and 11 April at Ft. Crook, Neb. Lt. Gen. Charles P. Hall, Director of the Organization and Training Division, War Department General Staff; Lt. Gen. George E. Stratemeyer, commanding general of the Air Defense Command, and Maj. Gen. Ellard A. Walsh, president of the National Guard Association, will be featured speakers at the opening session. The conference is sponsored by the National Guard Bureau in order that Senior Instructors may have the opportunity to discuss mutual problems with representatives of the Bureau, the Army Ground Forces, the Army Air Forces and the Organization and Training Division of the War Department General Staff. A feature of the conference will be a series of meetings between officers of the National Guard Bureau and Ground Forces delegates from each of the Army areas. Maj. Gen. H. L. Earnest, Assistant Chief of Staff G-3 for the AGF, will be a speaker. Maj. Gen. F. W. Evans, commanding general of the Second Air Force, will address the Senior Air Instructors.

Veterans who have been awarded the Silver Star or a higher decoration may enlist in the National Guard without regard to age requirements. Existing regulations had restricted enlistments to men 18 to 35 years of age who can meet the same physical and mental requirements as the Regular Army. Further relaxations of the age requirements which would permit veterans to enlist are: 1. Men 36 to 38 years of age may enlist if they have had at least one year of service in the armed forces of the United States. 2. Men 38 to 41 years of age may enlist if they have had at least two years in the armed forces of the United States. 3. Men 41 to 55 years of age may enlist if they have had at least two years of service plus the number of years the applicant is over 40 years of age.

Army Ground Forces—General Jacob L. Devers, Commanding General. Army Ground Forces, accompanied by Brig. Gen. Robert M. Bathurst, Deputy Chief of Staff, Brig. Gen. Bruce C. Clarke, Chief, Training Group, G-3, and Maj. Edward H. DeSaussure, jr., aide to the Commanding General, departed Ft. Monroe 2 April to inspect AGF training at Ft. Benning, Ga.; Ft. Sill, Okla., and Ft. Bliss, Tex. While on the trip General Devers will speak from Oklahoma City over the Columbia Broadeasting System at 6:15 EST, 5 April, in connection with Army Day activities, to be followed by an address before the Chamber of Commerce, El Paso, 7 April.

KEEP SHOES SPARKLING WITH

Liquid Shoe Polish

Put Liquid Dyanshine on sparingly, then brush or rub with a cloth and watch your shoes come to life on the double. Liquid Dyanshine covers better because it adds color to scuffs and scratches to give a smooth, even polish. Dyan-shine keeps shoes pliable and comfortable... replaces normal leather oils that dry out in sun and dust. Costs only ½ cent a shine, and the shine lasts longer. Follow Dyanshine directions to make it go farther.

We've added 80,000

Telephone Girls

in the last year

We're working hard to give you more and better telephone service than ever before.

In the last year, we have added 54,000 telephone operators; also 26,000 service representatives, secretaries, clerks, stenographers, typists and manufacturing employees.

These are just the figures for women. We have also increased our employees by 70,000 men - most of them war veterans.

Yet in spite of record figures on employment, manufacturing and installations, we are greatly concerned that there are still more than 2,000,000 people waiting for telephone service and many who are not getting the kind of service they want.

We want you to know that we are doing our level best to catch up with every telephone need of everybody everywhere.

RA Integration Curtailed

A heavy surplus of applicants for Regular Army commissions in the 27-30 year age group and in a corresponding group with three to six years' service will result in curtailment of appointments under the integration program.

Requirements for officers in this age group equal only a fraction of the numbe of applicants. In all, 70,000 applicants for Regular Army commissions will be turned down, the bulk of them being in this age group.

Revision of plans for integration this year reduced the number to be taken into the Regular Army from 20,000 to about 15,000 because of a shortage in applica-15,000 because of a shortige in applica-tions received from officers above and be-low the 27-30 year age group, according to Col. J. H. Michaelis, GSC, chief of the Procurement Branch, Personnel and Ad-ministration Division, War Department General Staff.

Of the 85,000 applicants to date, about or the 85,000 applicants to date, asout two-thirds are in the age or service group which would require their appointment in the grade of first lieutenant. It was found that appointment of all qualified persons without regard to age or service would greatly exceed requirements for the first lieutenant grade, which would seriously affect Army grade distribution for years to come. The limit set will be filled from the best qualified applicants in the age and service group.

Sports Front

As hinted here earlier, the All-America pro-football conference got itself a real hunk of commissioner when it selected Admiral Jonas Ingram for the job. In his first assignment, he clearly showed that he will be a strong and positive force for good.

showed that he will be a strong and positive force for good.

This took place during the league's annual schedule meeting, an affair which can, as easy as not, degenerate into a first-class rhubarb. The club owners regard the scheduling of satisfactory home dates as being a large part of a successful financial season, and enter the meeting prepared to fight tooth and nall for what they want. what they want.

what they want.

The meeting, as always, was held behind closed doors, but that didn't keep newsmen present from knowing where the Admiral stood. After a bit of bickering, Ingram took the floor and spoke, in scarcely dulcet tones, to the effect that childish petulance and attempted filibustoring, really earlier weeklers. tering would avail exactly nothing, as they were all going to stay right in the hotel until a schedule was drawn up that met with unanimous approval. The Ad-miral strongly hinted that a little cooperation might send them all home much schedule had been adopted.

A remarkably short time later the announcement was given out that the schedule had been adopted.

Army won its second baseball game of the season on Saturday 29 March, but hardly in impressive fashion, as they defeated Hofstra, 8-7. Glenn Davis helped matters no end with a home run.

Navy, meanwhile, trounced the University of Verment, 12-4, in its opening game to inaugurate Max Bishop's tenth season as coach. Hurler Ronnie Burton was practically the whole show, as he yielded but five hits, collected a home run for himself, and fielded his position perfectly, while garnering ten assists.

Troops Leaving Iceland
Remaining United States troops in Iceland are scheduled for evacuation next week. Under present plans an Army transport is scheduled to reach Reykjavik 8 April. It will depart immediately after taking aboard the less than 500 officers and men still stationed in Iceland.

The War Department disclosed that violent North American Atlantic storms prevented scheduled embarkation of the troops from Iceland late last month.

Three Medals to be Issued

The War Department 4 April announced that the American Defense Service Medal and the World War II Victory Medal will shortly be ready for general distribution to eligible Army veterans and military personnel.

It was also announced that general distribution of the World War II Occupation Medal will be made as soon as adequate supply is available. The medal is now in process of procurement.

Due to the current limited supply of these medals, token presentation only of the three medals will be made to qualified outstanding individuals in the United States and in the overseas theaters. Presentation will take place during Army Week — April 6 to 12 — to individuals chosen by area and theater commanders who will represent the millions of men and women, in and out of the Army, entitled to wear the medals.

Medal eligibles are requested not to write or apply to the War Department for the medals or information on obtaining them. The public will be advised as to proper procedure when sufficient medals are on hand for general distribution. Due to reduced personnel and stress of work the War Department will be unable to answer letters pertaining to the medals.

During the development of the War De-partment's proposed "Officer Personnel Act of 1947" a number of studies were pre-Act of 1947" a number of studies were prepared covering important features of the Act. In order to provide those interested in making a detailed study of the Act, the more important of these studies are being released.

The following discussion, prepared under the direction of Brig. Gen. John E. Dahlquist, USA, chairman of the Promotion Planning Board and a permanent member of the Secretary of War's Personnel Board, covers the general subject of "Promotion Lists" and includes informa-tion relative the establishment of promotion lists, the methods of placing officers thereon, and the problem of promotion list relative seniority.

PROMOTION LISTS AND APPOINTMENT THERETO

THERETO

1. Present laws.
a. Promotion lists. All officers except those of the Medical Department, Chaplains, and Professors, United States Military Academy, are carried on a single promotion list.

Officers of the Medical Corps, Dental Corps, Veterinary Corps, Pharmacy Corps, Chaplains and Professors are known as nonpromotion list officers because they are not carried on the single promotion list. The term "non-promotion list" is a misnomer because actually there is a separate list for the officers of each of the above categories.

b. Appointment of officers,

(1) For promotion list. Original appointment in the Regular Army for officers of promotion list branches except for those in the Judge Advocate General's Department, is made only in the grade of second lieutenant. They are placed at the foot of the promotion list. When sufficient officers of The Judge Advocate General's Department cannot be obtained by transfer from other branches, reserve judge advocates between the ages of 31 and 36 can be appointed as captains and placed at the foot of the captains on the promotion list.

(2) Non-promotion list officers. Medical Corps, Dental Corps, Veterinary Corps of promotion list.

(2) Non-promotion list officers. Medical Corps, Dental Corps, Veterinary Corps officers, and Chaplains, are appointed first lieutenants and placed at the foot of the list of officers of their respective corps. Pharmacy Corps officers are appointed as second lieutenants and placed at the foot of their list.

(3) Under Public Laws 281 and 670 (79th Congress). An exception to the above pro-cedure was made for officers appointed to the Regular Army under those laws. Officers were given a service credit for promotion purposes equal to the length of time their ages exceeded equal to the length of time their ages exceeded 25 years and were placed on the promotion list in accordance with such service credit or in accordance with length of active com-missioned service after 7 December 1941, whichever was the greater.

2. The Problem of a Single Promotion List.

missioned service after 7 December 1941, whichever was the greater.

2. The Problem of a Single Promotion List.
a. Purpose. The single promotion list was adopted in 1920 to correct the evils of branch promotion which had been the system in use for many years. Under branch promotion any change in Army organization increasing the size of an arm or service resulted in faster promotion for the officers of that branch. This constantly gave rise to bickering, jealousy, and political maneuvering on the part of the separate branches. The single list has worked remarkably well and has resulted in a unanimity among Regular Army officers never achieved prior to World War I. Only for the most cogent reasons should separate promotion lists be established.
b. The Air Corps Problem. The Air Corps is confronted with a situation which indicates the desirability of putting its officers on a separate list. When this Corps was established in 1920 it contained very few officers above the grade of first lieutenant. After organization very few senior officers were transferred to this Corps from other branches of the Army. This resulted in the Air Corps having a disproportionate number of its officers in the junior grades. In 1935, temporary promotion for Air Corps officers had to be resorted to in order that Air Corps units could be commanded by officers of proper grade.

This situation has been aggravated by the recent increase in strength of the Air Corps from approximately 3,000 officers to an authorized strength of approximately 20,000. The increase had to be made in the grades of major and below. Actually over 60% of the increase will take place in the grade of first lieutenant because of the lack of qualified older officers. It is estimated that after integration is completed there will be less than 800 officers in the Air Corps with more than 16 years' service. These officers, of necessity, will fill the principal positions in the Air Forces. If they remain on the single list, however, they will be so junior that they will not of years. An additional reason for establishing a separate promotion list for the Air Corps is that rated officers have an attrition rate during their early years of service different than that of other officers. Finally, a separate list should be established because of the War

Pepartment's represent possible degree of autonomy.

c. The Medical Department, Chaplains, and Women's Army Corps. Although officers of the Medical Department and Chaplains are known as non-promotion list officers, actually each corps has always had its own promotion list. These should be retained and called promotion lists. The officers for these corps are all appointed from civil life. Because of the additional education required, they are appointed in an advanced grade. Being specialists they cannot be used in other positions and are therefore not transferable to other branches, Officers of the Women's Army Corps likewise occupy limited positions and are not completely interchangeable with officers of other branches and will be a restricted position so far as promotion to higher grades is concerned and therefore should have their own promotion list.

3. Revision of Promotion List. Seniority

stricted opsition so far as promotion to higher grades is concerned and therefore should have their own promotion list.

3. Revision of Promotion List Seniority Because of Integration Under Public Law 281 and Public Law 670.

a. The so-called inequities, Integration of officers in the Regular Army under Public Law 281 and 670 has resuited in a number of so-called inequities. In general, these claims are made by officers who were in the Regular Army prior to integration. Their claim is that had they been allowed to resign and reenter the Army by integration, they would now be senior to their present position on the promotion list. In order to make possible the integration of over 30,000 officers, it was necessary to adopt certain rules to determine the position in which newly integrated officers would be placed on the promotion lists. Two rules were followed. The first was the base age rule. Candidates for integration were given constructive service for the numbers of days, months, and years their age exceeded 25 years. Thus an officer 47 years old at the time of integration was given constructive service of 22 years and placed on the promotion list above all officers with less than 22 years' service. Age was the determining factor in calculating rank for all officers who were more than 29 years and 6 months olds at time of the first integration. It was also the determining factor for officers less than 29 years and 6 months old whose total active federal commissioned service was less than the difference between their age and 25 years. The base age of 25 years was chosen because the average age at appointment of Regular Army officers prior to integration had been 24 years and 7 months. Except for officers of the Medical Department, Chaplains, and a relatively small number of promotion list officers for approximately the same age. In general, most pre-integration officers immediately senior to integrated officers are slightly younger although a few will be told.

The second rule was that officers integrated could will be told.

The second rule was that officers integrated could count all active federal commissioned service performed after 7 December 1941 and

If this was greater than the difference be-tween their age and the base age of 25 years this service would determine their place on the promotion list. This provision made it possible for several thousand integrated of-ficers to be placed above those regulars ap-pointed in 1942 after extended active duty as reserve officers atthough they had no more service, were no older, and in many cases, were volumer. vere younger.
b. Proposed Remedies.

reserve officers atthough they had no more service, were no older, and in many cases, were younger.

b. Proposed Remedies.

(1) Applying integration rules to regulars. There is only one remedy which would make it possible to place all officers, pre-integration regulars and newly integrated officers, on the promotion list on exactly the same basis. This would be to apply the integration rules to the pre-integration regulars. Such a procedure, however, would upset the rank of pre-integration regulars among themselves, established years ago, to a violent degree. Thus the officer appointed in the Regular Army when he was over 25 years old would jump all his classmates who are younger and in some cases would jump officers three or four years senior to him. This remedy would help those who were above the average age when appointed in the Regular Army but would hurt all others.

(2) Counting all active commissioned service. Those who had active federal commissioned service prior to appointment in the Regular Army and prior to 7 December 1941 want all of their service counted. This would benefit those Air Corps officers who had extended active duty as reserve officers and the Thomson Act officers. It would hurt all pre-integration regulars appointed from civil life and from the Military Academy. It would hurt all integrated officers who did not have such service. It would disturb the rank of pre-integration regulars mong themselves established for many years.

(3) Applying the integration rules to pre-integration regulars but leaving rank among themselves undisturbed. To avoid upsetting the rank of pre-integration regulars mong themselves established for many years.

(3) Applying the integration rules to pre-integration regulars among themselves established for many years.

(3) Applying the integration regulars among themselves it has been proposed that the integration regulars would push all pre-integration regulars with more than 3 years old when appointed. This constructive service would push all pre-integration per service.

c. Actual effect of integration. Integration of officers was necessary because of the increase in the size of the Army. This increase also has expanded greatly the number of higher grades required. The number of officers integrated into the Army who will rank from prior to 7 December 1941 is very much smaller than the increase in higher grades. Therefore, all officers whose date of original rank is prior to 7 December 1941 will benefit a great deal from the integration. Although some officers integrated into a position senior to some pre-integration regulars may have less service or be less deserving, the pre-integration regular is much better off than he would be had there been no integration. This is especially true in the Air Corps where very few officers were integrated into the grades of senior first leutenant, captain or major. For officers whose date of rank is 7 December 1941 or later the situation is the opposite. There are so many officers in this group that integration has actually resulted in a deterloration of opportunity for pre-integration regulars compared to the situation that obtained before integration. One other group has suffered as a group from the integration. Those are pre-integration Medical Department regular officers and Regular Army Chaplains. These officers averaged over 28 years old when originally appointed. Using a base age of 25 years for integrating Medical Department officers and chaplains was an error, It placed all integrated officers senior to pre-integration regulars who were older and had had more practice.

Army and Navy Journal April 5, 1947

d. Recommended changes. To apply any of the remedies described above would be a mis-older and had had more practice.

d. Recommended changes. To apply any of the remedies described above would be a mistake. Although they would help certain individuals, they would hurt a larger number and would cause new claims of inequities just as valid as those now made. It was inevitable that integration of 35,000 officers using rules fair to the entire group would give rise to some individual cases which appear anomalous, but so long as the general condition of the regulars affected was not impaired there can be no real claim of an inequity. It is believed two corrections should be made; namely, lieved two corrections should be made; namely,

(1) Credit all officers appointed in the Regular Army in the arms and services between 7 December 1941 and 31 December 1945 with all active commissioned service performed after 7 December 1941. That will only give these officers what all integrated officers received and will advance them to the position they would have held had they been appointed in the Regular Army at the time they were ready for such appointment.

(2) Give all officers of the Medical Department (except Pharmacy Corps) and the chaplains who were in the Regular Army prior to integration constructive service for the difference between the average age at appointment of all officers of each such corps and 25 years and advance them on their respective promotion list in accordance with such constructive service to the extent necessary to place integrated officers and regulars of the same age in the same relative positions.

Major, AC: "I favor a retirement of 2½% times the number of years' service regardless of type of service, and favor retaining some officers failed by selection boards for promotion. Some officers are superior captains but never could be made into suitable colonels. Let's keep them where they belong and pay them what they are worth. I want security with my Army career and feel the new bill may leave me without source of livelihood when most needed."

Col., QMC: "I believe that it will make 'Yes' men of truly ambitious officers who otherwise work for the best interests of the Army as a whole. In other words, instead of working for the Army, they will spend their efforts in 'Bucking' for promotion. In have no axe to grind in expressing my opinion.

"In general the new proposed change in promotion by selection is ideal theoretically, but its practical application I believe will develop a corps of officers a large part of whom will become 'bootlickers' and 'handshakers,' in many cases without their realizing it. Under our present system we have a number in that category who strive by such methods to obtain higher efficiency ratings. It is practically impossible to eliminate the matter of peronalities when accomplishing an efficiency report. In this connection regulations should require that every officer who makes out an efficiency report on a subordinate will offer such subordinate an opportunity to see the report. As a specific example of how injustice can be done to an officer, I personally know of one who attended a service school where he finished number two in a class of twenty-eight with a class average of over ninety per cent. Yet some years later when the officer had the opportunity to see his efficiency report for that particular year at school, he found he had been rated as 'Satisfactory' as a 'student.' This rank in met cundoubtedly prevented the officer from attending Army schools of higher education, since the policy required a rating of 'Superior' to be so selected. Under the proposed system this might cause the officer's elimination.

"Another matter which should be considered is the retirement of an officer at an early

Financial Digest
The national summary of general business and financial conditions prepared by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve system, based upon statistics for February and the first half of March, shows that industrial output and employment were maintained during that period at the record peacetime levels reached in at the record peacetime levels reached in January. Industrial production was maintained in February at the January rate of 188 per cent of the 1935-1939

Output of durable manufactures was slightly above the January rate, owing mainly to increased activity in the auto-mobile industry and to a somewhat greater than seasonal gain in production of lumber and other building materials. The number of automobiles and trucks as-sembled reached a new post-war peak which was about the same as the 1941 average.

Steel production showed a slight gain in February as a nine per cent increase in output at electric furnaces more than offset a two per cent decline in production at open hearth furnaces. In March scheduled operations continued to advance reaching a new post-war high of 97 per cent of capacity in the last week of the

Minerals production was maintained at the January rate, as a six per cent decline in coal output was offset in the total by increased production of crude petroleum and metals.

Wholesale commodity prices continued to rise during February and the first half of March. The Bureau of Labor Statis-tics' index of wholesale prices at 149 (1926 equals 100) was one-third above the level of last June.

the level of last June.
Deposits of businesses and individuals at commercial banks declined sharply and Treasury deposits at Federal Reserve Banks increased in February as a result of large tax payments. This shift of funds to Treasury accounts at the Reserve Banks put a drain on member bank reserves, which was offset in part by a decline in required reserves and in part by an increase in Reserve Bank holdings of an increase in Reserve Bank holdings of Government securities. In the first half of March, however, when Treasury de-posits at the Reserve Banks were drawn posits at the Reserve Banks were drawn down in connection with cash retirements of about $3 billion of maturing securities, member bank reserve positions were eased considerably and Reserve Bank holdings of Government securities declined sharply.

age, thru no fault of his own, except physical disability. Most army officers have no outside income: therefore, they have to figure their finances closely, especially the matter of insurance, children's education, etc. The officer should have a definite age limit at which to 'shoot,' and not have it changed as has been done in the past or a variable length of service as in the proposed promotion bill. The theory that an officer past forty-five or fifty years of age is not physically fit for combat was certainly shown to be the 'bunk' during World War II.

the disastrous effect it was bound to have upon the training and efficiency of units. Organizations redeployed from Europe, many with impressive combat records, were merely groups of individuals—frequently such units lacked even the necessary specialized administrative personnel to feed and properly maintain themselves. The burden and stress of time placed upon the European Theater in the hopeless task of accomplishing a wholesale shuffling of personnel and concurrently returning trained units to the United States for redeployment proved too great. It became the rule rather than the exception that units arrived in the United States seriously lacking in specialized and unit training, and grossly understrength or filled with unrelated or unsatiable MoS's. Fortunately the abrupt collapse of Japan saved us the embarrassment of choosing between extending our redeployment "turnaround" period in the United States by several months in order to retrain units almost from the bottom up, or sending worfully untrained units under misleading organizational designations of combat earned distinction to the Pacific at a cuvelal stage of the Japanese conflict.

The disruption of units begun with redeployment was even more devastating in the following demobilization period. Discharge criteria continued to be predicated upon justice and equality to the individual, and soldiers were returned to civilian status as rapidly as processing facilities could handle the load, Public pressure for even more rapid demobilization rerached a stage of near hysteria. Key personnel, both administrative and supervisory, logically had the most points and were discharged in the first groups. Control of units became difficult. There was no time or opportunity to pass on "know how" or to train replacements. The shortage of cooks and clerks was felt most acutely throughout the army. Loss of more highly specialized personnel in electronics, ordanace, communications, and in many other fields was not felt so keenly at the time, but these vacancies are stil

Even today, training has hardly progressed beyond the small unit stage in most of the units. An exception to this is the 2nd Infantry Division. It was able to retain sufficient experienced personnel to engage in unit training and to conduct a joint amphibious maneuver with the Navy and Army Air Forces in the vicinity of San Diego, California in November 1946. This maneuver was conducted on a divisional basis, less one combat team, with sizable Navy and Air Forces units participating. It is the largest postwar maneuver that has been endeavored to date, and was highly successful.

In early 1946, the need for Arctic training and development of equipment for Arctic operations came to the fore. Three experimental units were organized varying in size from 1200 to 1500 men. They were organized to include representation of all types of ground units—armor, artillery, infantry, engineers, ordnance, and others. Two of these units departed for Alaska in midsummer, 1946, and the third was established at Camp McCoy, Wisconsin. All three are scheduled to remain at their stations until late spring, 1947.

Of the many types of specialized training centers developed during the war, only a few have been retained. It is not envisaged that specialty training will be emphasized to the same degree in the future. A greater stress is placed on training of standardized divisions which subsequently will be given task force training of a specialized nature. However, air transportability training is being stressed. The ground work for future large scale air lifts is being laid. Likewise, airborne training and perparatory schooling for large scale air indoctrination training of ground troops is under way.

A Mountain and Winter Warfare Training Center was established at Camp Carson, Colorado to continue the work inaugurated during the war. It was planned to rotate regimental combat teams through this center, and the 38th Regimental Combat Team (2nd Infantry Division) is presently stationed there. Due to reductions in personnel and funds, the frequency of rotation has had to be delayed. The Center itself is to be abolished in the near future but this type of training will continue to be stressed by assigning experienced instructors to the unit stationed at Camp Carson.

An experimental educational and training program was begun in the 25th Regimental Combat Team at Ft. Benning, Georgia for the purpose of determining the best utilization of Negro manpower in the combat arms. This progressed only a short time in October and November 1946 when it had to be indefinitely postponed due to cuts in personnel.

November 1946 when it had to be indefinitely postponed due to cuts in personnel.

Due to economic restrictions recently imposed, it has been necessary for Army Ground Forces to consolidate school netivities wherever possible, eliminate certain courses and reduce activities. This has been accomplished with the minimum disruption to our existing system. Definite economies have been effected in both money and personnel, and at the same time we have maintained the framework of our school system.

The first step toward reorganization of the school system was effected by inactivating Headquarters Replacement and School Command, and assuming the duties performed by that headquarters in Headquarters Army Ground Forces. This function is now performed almost entirely by two staff divisions of the G-3 Section. The next step was to redesignate school activities and regroup them into four main centers. These centers are now formed almost entirely by two staff divisions of the 6-3 Section. The next step was to redesignate school activities and regroup them into four main centers. These centers are now organized as follows: (1) The Infantry School, at Ft. Benning, which absorbed The Airborne School as a department of The Infantry School; (2) The Armored School at Ft. Knox; (3) The Artillery School, Ft. Sill, with the Seacoast Branch at Ft. Scott and the Antiaircraft and Guided Missiles Branch at Ft. Bilss; and (4) The Ground General School, which replaced the Cavalry School, at Ft. Riley. Within these four school centers, common courses have been consolidated, non-essential courses eliminated and economies effected in overhead personnel. With the exception of the Ground General School at Ft. Riley, all schools conduct basic branch and advanced regular courses and associated courses for officers of the civilian components. In addition to the regular and associate courses, special courses are conducted for officers and enlisted men. A civil schooling program for qualified Army Ground Forces officers is being conducted at eighteen (18) of the leading universities throughout the country, with 158 students enrolled. These courses offer a Master's Degree for a two-year post-graduate course in specialized subjects. Literature pertaining to available courses and prerequisities for courses have been widely distributed to all Ground Forces agencies.

The Ground General School at Ft. Riley will conduct a Basic Course (branch immaterial) for all newly commissioned officers of the ground army, regardless of their source of commission. Such a course is now being conducted at Benning, Knox and Sill, but in August, 1947, consolidation will be effected at the Ground General School.

ducted at Benning, Knox and Sill, but in August, 1947, consolidation will be effected at the Ground General School.

Courses at the Army Ground Forces schools are designed to afford officers progressive military education, with a minimum of repetition. Basic courses emphasize units to include the battalion; advanced courses include study of the division, its supporting units and staff and command responsibilities up to the division commander. All courses emphasize teamwork, the importance of all elements of the battle team, and the necessity for close cooperation and understanding. The advanced courses are the final formal schooling for at least 50% of the ground officers. From this point, education at higher schools is by selection.

Recently the Command and Staff College at Ft. Leavenworth has been turned over to Army Ground Forces, This college will become the capstone in the Army Ground Forces schooling system and will coordinate doctrine of all Army Ground Forces schools.

Under the provisions of WD Circular 138 the Commanding General, Army Ground

Forces has been delegated the responsibility for the supervision of training of all National Guard units except those units under the Air Forces. Similarly, Army Ground Forces in responsible for the organization, administration and training of all personnel and units of the Organized Reserve Corps, other than air. Plans for both of these components were prepared by the War Department, and issued to the six army commanders for implementation. Federally recognized Reserve Corps units are considered as integral parts of the Army and as such their training is supervised and administered through normal channels. The Commanding General of each Army and his Staff are responsible for the supervision of this training, the allocation of units in the case of ORC and the plans for active duty training for summer encampments and other active duty training outlined by directives from Headquarters, Army Ground Forces.

Due to the rapid demobilization of the armed forces as a result of cessation of hostilities, the Regular Army units remaining in the continental limits of the United States have been drastically reduced. These unit reductions have placed quite a task on Army Commanders for the implementation of the National Guard, ROTC, and Reserve units. Activation programs for both components are progressing rapidly with approximately $2200 units of the ORC having been recently activated. National Guard units are organized under tables of organization appropriate to the arm or branch of service, and in the case of divisions will be organization and equipment for the Infantry and Armored Divisions on a peacetime basis strength. The Organized Reserve Corps presently is in the midst of organizing its units on the class "C" status, which involves only officer personnel. Many of these units may qualify to expand to a class "B" at an early date.

For the Fiscal Years 1947 and 1948 those units necessarily must be self-sustaining. In view of the fact that ORC units are only of class "C" crategory (officers only), unit training probab sive plans have been made for individual training of members of the Organized Reserve Corps. These plans entail the assignment of junior officers of the ORC to active duty with RTCs; assignment of selected officers for duty with higher staffs at War Department, AGF, Army, Corps, Schools, and Replacement Center Headquarters; attendance at all AGF, technical and administrative service schools, at either regularly scheduled courses or associate courses for which reserve officers may be qualified; and active duty training up to 15 days, for the purpose of assisting in the organization of the ORC units. Courses of instruction for officers and enlisted men of the National Guard have been made available in the AGF schools and the schools of the Technical and Administrative Services. Active duty for enlisted reserves has been authorized for a period from 15 to 90 days as assistant instructors at all RTCs.

Army Ground Forces is struggling to establish and maintain a progressive, well-rounded and vitalized training program. Against the gear wheels of appropriations reductions and drains of personnel for overseas replacements, a furlous pacing on the treadmill of circumstances is taking place to keep units and activities up to previous attainments and on an acceptable par.

and its operations are made more effi-

In this growth and expansion of Amer In this growth and expansion of American business economy lies the industrial strength and power to which the armed forces must turn for the implements of war, should the need for them ever again arise.

It should be fully apparent, then, that in the last analysis the industrial preparedness of the nation is dependent upon private industry's peacetime ability to produce large quantities of staple and useful items for normal civilian consumption.

Planning for industrial war mobilization is a function of the Army and Navy Munitions Board which was reconstituted Munitions Board which was reconstituted by the President in August 1945. The three members of the Board are Mr. Richard P. Deupree, president of the Proctor and Gamble Corporation, executive chairman; the Under Secretary of War, and the Assistant Secretary of the Navy.

In part the Board's job must be done by retaining standby plants and machines which are necessary to manufacture purely military items which have no civilian equivalents. The Board also must arrange for the stockpiling of strategic materials, such as tin and rubber which the nation could not get in sufficient quantity if another war interrupted our commerce. Further, the Board must study procurement and procurement planning activities of both services with a view toward achieving maximum economy and efficiency in these functions.

these functions.

The success of the Board's mission will depend, in large measure, on the cooperation between industry, and the armed forces, and upon the prompt and frequent exchange of information between the two. The Board's plans contemplate keeping industry continually advised as to possible wartime needs. And it is equally important that the procurement agencies within both services be kept abreast of changes in industrial capacity and other developments.

To facilitate the exchange of information with industry, the Board is now organizing industrial advisory committees. These committees will be composed of leaders in their fields who will make available their experience and "know-how" for the solution of specific problems confronting the armed forces.

confronting the armed forces.

Committees are being formed in such industries as non-ferrous metals, iron and steel, textiles, chemicals, rubber, machine tools and others. Several large organizations such as the Army Ordnance Association, the Navy Industrial Association, the Navy Industrial Association and others have shown a keen interest in the Board's problems and have made their membership available for service on industrial committees.

In addition, arrangements are virtually completed for the two great labor organizations—the American Federation of Labor and the Congress of Industrial Organizations—to furnish representatives for liaison in industrial mobilization planning.

The Army itself has established and is The Army itself has established and is now operating a program of assigning qualified officers to industrial plants. The three principal objectives of the program are to familiarize American industry with the needs of military procurement, improve the relationships between the armed forces and labor and management, and to increase the knowledge of Army officers of the general problems of the officers of the general problems of industry.

This educational program is furthered This educational program is furthered by the appearance of leading economists and industrialists before officer classes at the National War College and the Industrial College of the Armed Forces, among other service institutions.

A vast amount of work remains to be done before the Board's industrial mobilization planning is fully coordinated with industry and integrated with our military plans. It is gratifying to see, however, action planning is fully coordinated with industry and integrated with our military plans. It is gratifying to see, however, that as our plans progress, how well and unselfishly our program is received by industry as a whole.

In our thinking on industrial preparation we must face squarely the fact that there is a practical limit to expense and to interference with normal business processes—a peacetime point in war preparation beyond which America or any other democratic nation cannot be expected to go. The nation does not have enough money for the complete peacetime manufacture of all the implements of war. Our national economy could not stand such complete preparedness.

The best assurance of national security and lasting peace in the troubled and uncertain times of today lies in the knowledge by other nations that, if an emergency arises, America will again send not only the men but also the planes, guns and bombs to meet any military effort put forward against us.

Aggressor nations will never forget that our industrial power is a force that has never been overcome, and which if maintained will never be overcome. The Armed Forces, working through the Army and Navy Munitions Board, intend to preserve that respect in other nations, and to preserve in America confidence in ourselves and in our ability to prevail in peace and in war.

in one Bureau—Supplies and Accounts.
Our Nation has never fought a war in an economy of real scarcity. World War II was the closest we have ever been to such a situation. In January 1942, less than two months after the Japanese attack on Pager Haptor, the size of our wartrack on Pearl Harbor, the size of our war-time bill of requirements made it appar-ent that we needed an agency to assist the Secretary in coordinating the Navy's purchase program, to collect Navy requirements of raw materials and end products, and to establish a central point of contact with Industry and with Wartime Control Agencies. The Office of Procurement and Material was brought into being to accomplish these tasks.

Overall coordination of the Navy's ef-

following fields:

Current Procurement, where coordina tion within the Navy Department and between the War and Navy Departments is receiving continued attention.

Mobilization Planning. Here coordination with the War Department and with Industry is underway.

Engaged in the solution of these problems are the following divisions of the Assistant Secretary's Office:

The Material Division, headed by V. Adm. E. L. Cochrane, USN; it is composed of the following four Branches:

It is hoped that these plans will be approved by all government plans will be approved by all government agencies and that if trouble should arise this program will be put into immediate action, and will not be considered merely as a tentative plan, as was the case in 1941, when very little use was made of the mobilization plans in spite of the large amount of work involved in their prepara-

Another indication of the trend of the Navy's thinking in regard to the im-portance of understanding industry is its participation in the work of the Indus-trial College of the Armed Forces, where senior officers are given courses in eco-nomic mobilization (including research and development, requirements, produc-tion, purchase, distribution, manpower, foreign reserves, and organization and administration).

ce would govern promotions."

Chairman Short said that the only witnesses currently scheduled to testify against the Navy promotion bill were representatives of the American Dental Association, who are expected to oppose the maximum of one Admiral in the Dental Corps now written into the bill.

Changes Being Prepared
After two days of hearings, Admiral Sprague said, The Navy has already begun re-drafting sections of the bill to conform with views expressed by members of the subcommittee. Such sections, he said, would be available for study in comparison with original proposals, and could be inserted in the bill should the committee so desire.

Chief issue at divergence with Navy proposals is the rank of Commodore, which the Budget Bureau recommended might be re-established with identical rank and pay with Brigadier Generals of the Army and Marine Corps. Repre-sentative Mendel Rivers (D-S.C.) has sparked this discussion.

The Navy opposes the creation of the one-star rank because foreign navies do not have Commodores, Admiral Sprague declared. When United States task groups enter foreign ports with Rear Admirals in command, the U. S. Navy flag officers hold at least equal rank with the senior officer of the port, he pointed out, with the "finest Navy in the world, with the "mest Navy in the world, we should not have to send a Commodore to call on a foreign Rear Admiral."

Mr. Rivers suggested that this disparity might be overcome by giving Commodores "spot appointments" to Rear Admiral when they enter on duties requir ing official transactions with navie other nations.

Admiral Sprague said it was the Navy's desire to terminate all spot appointments, and pointed out that the only use of the expressions "Rear Admiral of the upper half" and "lower half" was in reference to pay. The rank of Commodore was abolished in 1899, he said, and the "upper half" and "lower half" were created then.

Discrepancy In Any Case
"The only question we are raising is our dealing with officers of other counraising is he asserted. "The discrepancy in rank suffered now by the Army and Ma-rine Corps is one the Navy suffered many years before the rank of Commodore was Chairman Short had declared earlier that "since the United States Navy is the finest in the world, might we not set the pattern by adopting the rank of Commodore again." Admiral Sprague said this would be fine except that, as at present, it would work to the disadvantage of the "finest Navy in the world."

Secretary Forrestal, who will appear before the committee when the detailed discussion of the Navy bill is completed, will be called upon to present the Navy Department's official stand on this issue. Fleet Admiral Chester W. Nimitz, USN, will follow Mr. Forrestal as a witness on Commander Martineau, in explaining in detail how the Navy promotion plan would work, declared that "assuming a full-strength Navy of 35,000 line officers, run-strength Navy of 35,000 line officers, assuming stabilized conditions, and further assuming that the present capacity of the Naval Academy is not changed," the peacetime Navy officer corps will eventually comprise 75% college graduates and only 25% Naval Academy graduates. This further depends, he said later, on the continued capacity output of NROTC graduates through the Holloway Plan.

At present, however, it appears that half of the officers on the lineal list, on completion of the transfer program, will be former Reserve and Temporary officers. Figures were introduced into the record showing that of the 42,688 applirecord showing that of the 42,088 appli-cations for transfer received by the Navy by 20 March, 15,754 were accepted for transfer, and 10,999 had accepted their commissions. By 1 July, 14,009 accept-ances are expected.

This represents 4% of all the Reserve officers, Representative Cole said, in pointing out that the officers transferred to the Regular Navy should be the very finest of temporary, war-service officers.

Stabilized Conditions

For the present, Admiral Sprague as-serted, 27,000 Regular officers represents the end of the transfer program. "We do not wish to build up a larger officer corps due to the uncertainty of the size of the peacetime Navy."

By limiting the officer corps to this figure, Admiral Sprague said, the Navy will be able to assure Regular officers a reasonable career, rather than being ob-liged at a later date to release officers due to "limited appropriations or Nadue to tional policy."

Commander Martineau told the com

Commander Martineau told the committee that during the transition period, which will end on 1 Jan. 1957 or when the Navy reaches 95% of authorized strength, forced attrition will be small. This is so, he said, because under the transfer program, the Navy is limiting the Regular officer corps to 27,000 until conditions are stabilized. When and if further expansion of the officer corps becomes desirable he continued, the Navy comes desirable, he continued, the Navy would prefer to build up from the bottom with new, young officers, rather than to transfer Reserves into the ranks. Commander Martineau explained that the promotion zone principle would pre-serve a greater "equality of opportunity" for advancement among all officers than under pre-war, permanent statutes. The revised percentages of distribution pro-posed for each rank would also assist in maintaining a steady flow of promotions he declared.

Representative Paul Kilday (D-Tex.) pointed out, in this connection, that a considerable amount of forced attrition In the past was necessary not because there were no assignments for officers in the next higher grade, but because the percentages did not permit vacancies. He asked whether the Navy can justify the percentages it now proposes, and Commander Martineau replied that billets do exist for officers in the percentages which the Navy proposes now be made permanent.

Discuss Percentage Distribution Earlier, Admiral Sprague said that the percentage distribution now proposed by the Navy is virtually the same as pre-war distribution including the officers dewar distribution including the officers declared "fitted and retained." In 1938, he said, 5.1% of the officers were Captains, including 1.1% who were fitted and retained; 10.8% Commanders, including 2.8% fitted and retained officers; and 20.9% Lieutenant Commanders, including 5.9% ditred and retained officers. 5.9% fitted and retained officers.

This distribution generally follows the Navy's current proposal of 6% Captains, 12% Commanders, 18% Lieutenant Com-manders, 25.75% Lieutenants, and 38.5% junior officers, Admiral Sprague asserted In support of the promotion zone principle, Admiral Sprague introduced fig showing that in past years, some classes did not have equal opportunity for promotion as others, and stated that this was due to the variable number of annual va-cancies. Under the promotion zone, vacancies over a five-year period would be the main factor in determining the length of the promotion zone, and officers in the promotion zone not recommended for motion would be considered as having failed of selection.

The following figures show the percent age of selection, from Commander to Captain, in the years indicated:

91 1929.... 1930... 1930. 1931. 1921 100 1921 1933 100 1934 81 86 97 96 85 1924

Admiral Sprague stated that if the promotion zone principle operated over these years, no one class would have been pro-moted in full while another suffered heavy attrition, but that periods of heavy attri tion would have been equally distributed among classes

It was pointed out that almost half of each group was forced out of the Navy during the early '30s, and that although this was done without foresight of World War II, this deprived the Navy of officers who should have been on active duty at the start of the war.

Representative Short asked whether the Navy had given consideration to plac-ing a limit on the number of outstanding officers who might be selected for accelerated promotion from below the promotion zone. Admiral Sprague stated that such a limit is being incorporated into new drafts now being prepared in the Bureau of Naval Personnel.

The committee has also questioned the advisability of granting retirement credit to Transferees who twice fail of select tion from Lieutenant to Lieutenant Commander. Although the bill now propose that Transferees be credited with at least 20 years' service should they be retired at that point in their careers, several Con-gressmen declared that to grant them retirement benefits for service not actually performed would not be fair to officers who had completed 20 years' service, and would open the door to such privileges among civilian employees of the Govern-

Dental Corps Admirals Commander Martineau declared that the Navy had originally provided for two Admirals in the Dental Corps, but that the Budget Bureau had reduced this to one.
Representative Rivers initiated this dis-
